Gas Station Bandits Get $17 in Cash

Two bandits heldup a service station on Hawthorne Avenue Monday night and escaped with $17. Attendant Allen Cridebring, 18, told police he was sitting in the station's office when the two holdup men entered and asked for a can of gasoline. While he was filling the can one of the men said "This is a holdup," and took $17 from a cash box. The bandits then took Cridebring to a restroom where they told the attendant "Don't come out or we'll shoot you." Cridebring waited about five minutes and called police. He said the bandit that did the talking simulated a gun until they were in the restroom where he displayed a revolver.

"A woman should never give a man an ultimatum in which he has to choose between her and something else."—DALE KUHNS, San Carlos flying school owner.

The Constitution says nothing about Congressional investigations. But since 1821 the Supreme Court has upheld such fact finding in the interest of good laws. How else can good laws be designed than through informed law makers?

In 1880 Congress tried to find out why a certain bank had failed, but the Supreme Court then said no: in that case Congress was merely prying into citizens' affairs without any legislative purpose. It could not, therefore, compel anyone to bring in records or to testify.

But so long as Congress has a law-making aim, it can get at private information. The court frowns upon exposure "for the sake of exposure."

THE COURTS are slow to interfere with Congressional investigations, but have done so. When a Congressional Committee (1) has exceeded its powers (2) asked for information outside the scope of its inquiry, or (3) has no clearly defined scope for its investigation. Most witnesses who refuse to answer Congressional questions rely on the Fifth Amendment which says that no person may be "compelled to be a witness against himself."

THE FIFTH Amendment sets out the citizens' right in any criminal case not to give testimony which may "incriminate" him.

Recently witnesses have evoked the First Amendment as well. Under the free speech clause of the First Amendment they sometimes refuse to answer questions about their political activities or beliefs. To expose oneself by such testimony to the community wrath for political activity might well "abridge" one's freedom of speech.
